Words of Praise For Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy

"How thankful we are to you for getting a hold of your wonderful Remedy. My wife could not have had but a short time to live if she had not taken your Wonderful Remedy when she did. One more of those precious years, and she would have been without a doubt. Now she is free from all pain, free from heart trouble and free from that disturbing Neuralgia—all the result of five treatments—this is the evidence of the expelling of five or six hundred Gall Stones. Now she is able to eat anything she wants and her appetite is good and before taking your medicine she had no appetite and when she ate anything she would suffer death for so long and could not sleep at night; since taking your treatment she sleeps well all night long. T. A. NEALL, Roanoke, Texas."

The above letter should convince you more than anything else could say in behalf of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. Sufferers should try one dose of this Remedy—one dose should convince them that they can be restored to health. Nearly all Stomach Ailments are caused by the clogging of the intestinal tract with mucus and catarrhal secretions allowing poisonous fluids into the stomach and otherwise deranging the digestive system. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy positively removes these secretions without a surgical operation and puts the system back to normal. Cases in the Stomach and Intestines and all of the usual symptoms of Stomach, Liver and Intestinal Ailments. Ask your druggist about Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy or send to Geo. H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free booklet on Stomach Ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored.

"Who made me a mannikin?" he demanded, with womanish fury, a fury that had been striving for utterance these many years. I had ambition and hopes and ability once—not much, perhaps, but enough—before you married me. I was nothing great, but I was getting along. I had confidence too, but you took it away from me. You absorbed me. You had your father's brain, and it was too big for me. It overshadowed mine. In a way you were a vampire, for what I had you drained life of. But tonight, when he got up before those other men and dangled my shame before my eyes, I had enough manhood left in me to strike back. Thank God for that at least! Maybe it's not too late yet for me to be a man. Maybe if I get away from you and try—His voice died out weakly. In his face there was a miserable half gleam of hope.

"I never knew you felt like that. I never knew you could feel that way," she said in a colorless voice. "But you made a terrible mistake."

"Do you mean to say you don't love him?"

"No, I have loved him for a long time. I can't remember when it began. She spoke very listlessly, looking past him as if at a long familiar picture which she was tired of contemplating. "I never knew what love was before; I never even dreamed. I'd give my life right now to undo what you have done. Just for his sake, for he is innocent. Oh, don't sneer; it's true. He loves the Garvel girl and wants to marry her. I'm going to tell you the whole truth now without sparing myself. It began, I think, at Tall-boggs, that night when he kissed me. It was the only time he ever did such a thing. It was dark, we were alone, I was frightened, and it was purely impulse on his part. But it woke me up, and all at once I knew how much he meant to me. When I discovered that he cared for that girl—well, if you overheard you must know. I frightened Garvel into dismissing him, and I set out to break him, just to show him that he needed me. Tonight he scorned me. That's the truth, Stephen. If we believed in oaths I would swear it."

"You are shielding him. You want to make me out wrong." But she knew he knew.

"Those are the facts. Heaven knows they are bad enough, but they are by no means so bad as you thought. And I'm your wife, Stephen. That thing you did was brutal. Those men will talk. I was guilty no doubt in my thoughts, but I'm young, and you have no right to blight my life and my reputation—yes, and yours—by a thing like that. We will have to meet those men. What are you going to do?"

"I don't know," he said. "In all my life I never felt but one moment of power and that it seems, was false. For years I have longed to show myself a man, and now—what have I done? What have I done? I am no monster. Why couldn't you be consistent? Why did you go halfway? Why couldn't you be all good or all bad and save me this?"

"All women are half good and half bad."

"I can't blame you for not loving me, I suppose," he mumbled. "No woman of your kind could love a man like me."

"Those men!" she said in a way that made him writhe.

"Wait until I think. I must think."

"Perhaps in the morning we can see a way out."

"That's it," he nodded. "You go to bed and I'll think. I'm trying to think now, but this heat is suffocating me and my head is tired."

Despite the breathless oppression of the night, she shivered. "I never can meet them now, and I don't see how you will dare to, knowing that you were wrong."

"Don't!" he pleaded. "The other was bad enough, but this—Tell me what to do!"

"I can't. I don't know myself. All I can see is that those men will never cease to believe, no matter what you tell them."

As she prepared for bed an hour later she heard him still stirring about in his quarters, but afterward she did not detect his cautious footsteps when he stole out of his chamber, closing the door softly behind him.

Kirk was roused from a heavy, senseless slumber the next morning by a vigorous rapping at his door. He opened the door and Runnels rushed in.

"Where did you go after I left you last night?"

"I came here, of course." As the memory of the previous night swept over Kirk he scowled.

"Did you stay here?"

"No. I went out again, and was out nearly all night trying to walk it off." Runnels' face blanched, and he drew back.

"Then, of course, you know?"

"What?"

"Don't Cortlandt. He's dead!"

"Dead? When? Where? How did it happen?"

"Nobody knows just how. He was found on the sea wall near Alfarez's house, shot."

"Shot! Good Lord!"

"Did you see Cortlandt again after I left you?" Runnels swallowed hard.

Kirk whirled about and faced him.

"Great heavens! No! See here, that idea is ridiculous!"

Runnels sank weakly into a chair and mopped his face. "When you said you'd gone out again it knocked me flat, understand?"

"I can prove where I was, for Allan was with me. I couldn't sleep, so I tried to walk off my excitement. No, no; I couldn't do a thing like that! I thought last night that I could, but—I couldn't, really."

"I'm afraid Wade will tell all about the party if we don't stop him."

"Then we'd better hunt him up." Kirk resumed his dressing, while Runnels consulted his watch.

"No. 5 is due in twenty minutes. We'll probably find him at the office." Together they hastened to the railroad building. Runnels, telling all he knew of the tragedy as they went along, found about daylight by a Spigott policeman, who had identified it. Becoming panic-stricken at the importance of his discovery, he had sounded the alarm, then reported directly to the governor, whose house was close by. The whole city was alive with the news. Rumors of suicide, murder, robbery, were about, but no one seemed to know anything definite.

"It was suicide," Kirk averred, with conviction. "The man was insane last night, and that accounts for what he said about me. He's been sick for a long time."

"If those boys will only keep their mouths shut," Runnels said anxiously. "There's no telling what these Spigotts might do if they heard about that row."

EYE-SORE

Traction Company Seemed So Proud of a Long Time is a Thing of the Past.

When traction company men began today to dismantle old work car No. 2, a landmark in Clarksburg passed out of service and the first double trucked car used in this part of West Virginia, ceased to exist. The old car, used for work and light hauling purposes over the local lines, was a familiar sight on local streets for many years. It long since passed the point where cars remain useful but was patched up and kept in the service until it broke down completely from old age and has been replaced.

Many years ago, when the traction company completed its line from Fairmont to Monongah, six miles south, a double trucked car was purchased for this suburban run. In that day the single trucked cars were the only cars in use in West Virginia and No. 2 was an interesting sight not only to the public but to traction men from other lines.

"The road was pushed on to Clarksburg, on to Weston, to Fairview, to points around Clarksburg, and the Mannington road was built. Still old No. 2 remained in service, being out practically every day in the year. When larger and more modern equipment became in vogue on the system, the old car was changed from a passenger coach to a work car and was sent from Fairmont to Clarksburg."

Here it was invaluable for its weight of sufficient lightness in weight that it could be used to haul assignments from the wholesale districts in Glen Park over the highly constructed Fourth street bridge, to the main portion of the city. It was also used by the local officials for many other purposes.

About six weeks ago, the barn foreman reported that No. 2 was unfit for duty and a more thorough inspection showed that it could not be repaired. It was shunted off on a siding in the local yards until yesterday when it was pulled into the barn for dismantling.
